GOLDEN TAN IN MINUTES

What is Airbrush Tanning?

The airbrush tanning system in its simplest form, is the distributing of a tan colour to the skin utilizing air compressors and an airbrush delivery system. The compressor forces air out through the end of an airbrush which holds the solution in a separate chamber. As the air rushes past it collects small quantities of the solution which are then deposited onto the skin. Some systems take this process a step further and have developed technology that polarizes the tanning solutions used - this in effect turns the fine spray into tiny little magnets. Our body's natural magnetic fields then draw these fine particles to the skin creating an evenly distributed colour.

The active ingredient is dihydroxyacetone (DHA) and most airbrushing solutions also contain a further external bronzer which begins to show immediately as soon as they have been sprayed. This aids the application as the areas that have already been treated are visible. Therefore the initial colour of the skin is determined by the formulation of the bronzer used.

Solutions used in these systems do not contain any sunscreens to protect the skin from UV exposure and do not help in the production of vitamin D. So remember to apply a sunscreen when you decide to go out.
